BREMEN

A free-spirited and fiercely independent wind whistles through Bremen's nooks and crannies. This wind certainly attracted a donkey, a hound, a cat and a cockerel in the Grimm Brother's tale of The Bremen Town Musicians. Now the city's mascots, the four of them headed for Bremen to start a new life as musicians. Their motto is still ringing true today: "We are off to Bremen - you will find something better than death everywhere." As Germany's second largest port, Bremen's link to the sea and its get up and go spirit are undeniable.

THE CITY

© BTZ

Warm light pours out of twisty alleyways, the smell of coffee, beer and chocolate whiffs around each cobbled corner and a distinctly entrepreneurial flair bubbles from countless shops and businesses huddled together in Bremen's central Schnoorviertel. Elaborate town villas hark back to the grand maritime trading boom of the 17th and 18th centuries. Bremen is one of three independent German city states. Worldliness and liberalism define this city's free-spirited atmosphere. Bremen's citizens know how to live well and pride themselves of unshakeable tolerance. Visitors from all around the world are welcomed warmly and treated royally. This openness has a historic reason. Riches and cosmopolitan attitudes flooded in with the sea water. Bremen emerged as one of the strongest members of the Hanseatic League during the Middle Ages. The city has been governed by its citizens rather than the nobility ever since, a heritage firmly stuck in every citizen's soul.

People used to meet, deal and debate on Market Square and still do so today. Rumoured to be Germany's most beautiful, the town hall (Rathaus) is now a UNESCO world heritage site. Meeting, debating and socialising still form the bedrock of life in Bremen. It's something you can do around the clock in an impressive array of bars, bistros, cafés and restaurants. You need to be fit after all. A city packed to the rafters with cultural surprises and distinctly un-metropolitan quirkiness is waiting to be discovered.

EATING

©Hofbräuhaus Bremen

Cosmopolitan flair meets distinctly down to earth garb in Bremen. Watch the foam bubbles burst on countless versions of international coffee or brave those very hearty local specialities. Kohl und Pinkel (cabbage and spicy sausage) keep Bremen fans on their culinary toes between October and February. Knipp, a poor man's mix of grits and bacon served with fried potatoes and apples, is also enjoying undying popularity. Bremen is also a destination for wine - Bremer Ratskeller has the world's largest collection of Wine - and beer - Bremen is home of Beck's Beer.

Bremer Ratskeller

It's been going strong since 1405, it's rumoured to be God's very own wine cellar and the atmosphere in this world heritage building will leave you addicted. A German foodie institution not to be missed under any circumstances as it also has the world's largest collection of German wines.

SHOPPING

© BTZ

You can't escape Bremen's independent and non-conformist soul. For a spot of individualistic Bremen spirit, the twisty 16th century Schnoor quarter is unbeatable. Fishermen and artisan cottages burst with galleries, goldsmiths and eccentric retail quirkiness. Keep a preying eye open for aromatic teas, jewellery and hand-painted crockery.

Those with a penchant for fine spirits will find their holy grail around the main market square: Ratskeller stocks some of Germany's best wines. Just down the road, beautifully hand-crafted toys line the shelves of Martinshof.

Sögestrasse comes up trumps with swish but traditional fashion houses, Stiesing and Roland-Center (tram 5 and 8). All things classy and pricey congregate around Fedelhören, where delicatessen shops and antiques rub shoulders with designer boutiques. On a rainy day, head for Domshof Passage. This glass-covered shopping mile is packed with exclusive little shops and boutiques to tempt even the most dedicated retail enemy. There is also Weser-Park (bus 25) and the Ostertorviertel, or simply "Viertel", which is a lively quarter around the Ostertorsteinweg with pubs, discotheques, cinemas, boutiques and shops with groceries from all over the world.

Further afield, Einkaufs- und Erlebnis-Center Haven Hööv't in Vegesack is Bremen's first shopping harbour. The atmosphere is cosy and modern, but certainly less crowded than in more central quarters.

Airport

Bremen is served by Bremen airport (+49 (0)421 5595-0, www.airport-bremen.de), which is located a mere 3.5 kilometres outside the city centre. Tram line 6 to Universität (via city and Hauptbahnhof) takes you right to the centre every 10 minutes (€2.20).

Taxis to the centre cost around €15.00 - Roland Taxi (Tel: +49 (0)421 30 200 433) offers pre-booked transfer services.

Public transport

When it comes to public transport, Bremen offers an extensive and reliable tram and bus network. Tickets can be purchased at any BSAG customer centre or sales point. They range from single fair and day tickets to 2-day travel cards and seasonal tickets. Extensive information in English is available on the website.

Internet: www.bsag.de

Bicycles

The transport of choice is the bicycle. An extensive cycle path network pays tribute to Bremen's favourite vehicle. Bremen and the surrounding countryside are totally flat.
